Composer Notes

Psalm 104 is the prescribed responsorial psalm for Pentecost, and this gospel-style setting utilizes the verbatim (Lectionary) text, (albeit with one line missing from verse 2). The song is also useful for confirmation and for any celebration of the Holy Spirit.

Some musicologists refer to the motif of this song as the “Baptist River” style, a uniquely American approach to hymn interpretation that relies on a pronounced chorded piano, a basic I-IV-V chord structure (in this case, I-vi-IV-V, with passing chords), a strict 3/4 tempo that utilizes occasional sudden stops (the so-called railroad tracks of music notation), and an inspiring gospel singer on the verses, with choral support. If you can utilize all these elements in your ensemble, great! But this song can also be presented simply. The important thing is to let the melody and the text soar.

Why a Baptist approach for a Catholic responsorial psalm? The Second Vatican Council (1962–1965) opened the door to an ecumenical dialogue among Christians. Music can be the common language of the Spirit that unites diverse communities. Is that not what the Pentecost event was all about?
