Composer Notes

Psalm 104 is included in the Christian liturgical cycle at Pentecost and the Easter Vigil and for Confirmation. It is a celebration of creation and an ideal table prayer. Calling it a psalm of ‘new orientation,’ Walter Brueggemann tells us, “Read Psalm 104!”

Only seventy years ago, the psalms were forbidden as distinctly Jewish in Nazi Germany. Many theologians dispensed with the Old Testament to appease the Nazis but, under Dietrich Bonhoeffer’s leadership, the Confessing Church seminary at Finkenwalde retained the discipline of the psalms for daily prayer and meditation. The seminary was forcibly closed by the Gestapo. Bonhoeffer was under scrutiny, and his 1940 book on the psalms was published without the regime’s consent. It portrayed Christ as a first century practising Jew, and shared the discipline of communal prayer practised at Finkenwald. From his cell in the Nazi prison at Tegel, Bonhoeffer wrote to his parents on 15 May 1943, “For years I’ve read the Psalter daily; there is no other book I know and love so well as this one.”
